Dear Mother & Dad,

Now and myself take this opportunity in joining with you in your celebration of a significant day.

In those twenty-two years, we have been affiliated with you for an average of twenty-years, so that really your anniversary is ours too. It is only lately that we have begun to really appreciate what you have done and are doing for us. Now, we can easily see the sacrifice and effort necessary to raise a family and give them all the possible advantages. This realization makes us doubly conscious of the effort we must make in order to deserve what you have given us.

Whenever I begin to philosophize, as I always do in a congratulatory letter, I seem to become formal etc. But in real American language, Mom and I want to say that you are the grandest parents we could wish for. So here's to no end of twenty-second anniversaries! We hope you both celebrate it in true fashion..

With the best of everything, we are

Your loving sons,
Bob and Don

P.S. This isn't my writing but it expresses my sentiments admirably
